25th Anniversary Meeting of the North American Labor History Conference

by Christopher H. Johnson, Robert Zieger, and Elizabeth Faue

The North American Labor History Conference was first held at Wayne State University in 1978 under the direction of Stanley Shapiro and History Department committee members Robert Zieger, Christopher H. Johnson, and Philip Mason. In eight sessions over three days, the NALHC hosted leading labor scholars in both U.S. and European history, including Alexander Saxton, David Montgomery, Louise Tilly, Leslie Moch, William Sewell, Joan Scott, and John Merriman. A small but growing group of historians participated in wide-ranging discussions of working-class politics, labor organization, and sources for the new labor history. Over the next few years, department chair Melvin Small dedicated important resources toward the building the nation's first and only annual labor history conference. Its original committee, along with the then-recent hire John Bukowczyk, rotated the conference directorship throughout the 1980s.

When Bob Zieger left for the University of Florida, the History Department was unable at first to replace him. Only in 1990, when Elizabeth Faue arrived at WSU to teach labor and working class history, did the conference once again take off. Since that time, the NALHC grew tremendously. Turning toward thematic, interdisciplinary conferences with a broad range of subjects, the conference has grown to encompass some of the best and most innovative scholarship in labor and working-class history. The highly successful "Men, Women, and Labor" conference in 1991 was followed by conferences on labor, citizenship, and the state; international and comparative labor history; culture and community in working-class history; workers and the city; class and politics, and labor, migration and the global economy. In 1996-97, the NALHC helped to organize and host the founding of the Labor and Working Class History Association (LAWCHA), with which it has a strong and continuing working relationship.

Since 1978, the NALHC has maintained its commitment to showcasing the best research in labor history and working-class studies in the United States and internationally. Over 1000 scholars have presented their work in panels, plenary sessions, poetry readings, and workshops at the NALHC, with annual attendance averaging between 220 and 250. Over 40% of those who participate are women. Participants range from graduate students to senior professors, union officers, policy-makers, and community activists, a mix that reflects the current diversity of the field. The NALHC is particularly proud of its role in providing graduate students in labor and working-class history with a forum for their work, a role enhanced by its co-sponsorship with LAWCHA of travel grants for graduate student scholars. All in all, the NALHC has much to be proud of in its twenty-five years of promoting and presenting the histories of working people.

This not only helps in tracking expenses but also ensures compliance with tax regulations. The text further explains that proper record-keeping is essential for identifying trends and managing cash flow effectively.

In the second section, the author provides a detailed overview of the accounting cycle. It starts with identifying the accounting entity and then moves through the steps of journalizing, posting, and balancing the ledger. The importance of double-entry bookkeeping is highlighted, as it ensures that the accounting equation remains in balance. The text also touches upon the preparation of financial statements, including the balance sheet, income statement, and cash flow statement.

The third part of the document focuses on the practical application of accounting principles. It discusses how to handle various types of transactions, such as sales on credit, purchases on credit, and adjustments for accrued expenses and revenues. The author provides examples and explains the underlying logic for each entry. This section is particularly useful for students who are learning to apply theoretical concepts to real-world scenarios.

Finally, the document concludes with a summary of the key points discussed. It reiterates the importance of accuracy, consistency, and transparency in accounting. The overall goal is to equip students with the knowledge and skills necessary to succeed in their accounting careers.
